MICHAEL ZIELENZIGER

Michael Zielenziger, a Pulitzer-prize-winning author and journalist, is a visiting scholar at the University of California, Berkley and works with The Monitor Group, the global consulting firm, analyzing issues related to Asia, technology and globalization. As a contributing writer to the AARP Bulletin over the past three years, he was written extensively about the economic insecurity facing the 50+ generation.

The former Tokyo bureau chief for Knight Ridder Newspapers, Mr. Zielenziger is the author of Shutting out the Sun: How Japan Created its own Lost Generation (N.A. Talese-Doubleday) which describes the social malaise that now confronts an aging Japan. The book has been translated into Japanese and Italian. As a consultant, he advises corporations and governments on developing strategic priorities and discerning emerging trends. Mr. Zielenziger has been part of two Pulitzer Prize-winning reporting teams and a finalist for a third for his reporting from China. He is also a former John S. Knight Fellow at Stanford University's Graduate School of Business.
